

The heatmap displays a 10x10 grid of colored squares. The diagonal elements (from top-left to bottom-right) are yellow, while the off-diagonal elements are red. This pattern is characteristic of a matrix with a strong diagonal and low off-diagonal values, often representing a sparse or uncorrelated dataset. The red color indicates a low or negative correlation, while the yellow color indicates a high or positive correlation.